Moving abroad for your studies? Here's how to prepare for it

There aren't any Magic Universities in Singapore.

Congratulations, you're going overseas to pursue your studies, and it's going to be an exciting time as you immerse yourself in a new culture and living abroad on your own.

But it's not as simple as packing up your belongings and hopping on a plane, at least not if you'll want to have a seamless transition into overseas student life.

Spend time doing research about the place you're going to.

Learn about local customs, laws, and cultures to help with your assimilation.

Having bosom buddies can make or break your student experience.

Look for student interest groups and societies to make friends with like-minded people.

Plan properly for your finances. Try to get an accurate estimate of the local cost of living to budget for rent, utilities, food, transportation, and social activities whilst you are there.

Find a bank who has a presence both in Singapore and the country you're going to. It'll be easier for you to open an account when you get there...

...and for your parents to transfer money easily in the event of an emergency.

Don't be afraid to ask for help if you need it — you aren't expected to know everything.

Most importantly, be open to new experiences to make the best of your time overseas and make long-lasting memories.
